

Still using Visio to create and manage your processes?

Organizations using Visio to map and manage processes often struggle with process complexity, version control and process variations. It's tough for teams to know which processes are up-to-date and where processes are stored.

Many organizations start their process journey using flowcharting tools like Visio.

While Visio can be used to mock up point-in-time process flows, it is not the right tool for organizations who want to drive ongoing process management and improvement.

With Promapp, it's easy to create, update and share processes, and to control process variations. It's easy for everyone to provide feedback and improvement suggestions on processes. With Promapp, process management is easy.

Many of our clients are companies that have invested time and effort over the years in Visio and procedure manuals, and have eventually realized the limitations of this approach.

“

Keeping processes up to date with Promapp is simple. It doesn't take hours like it does with Visio.

Manually fiddling with Visio maps was very time consuming. In Promapp the documentation happens automatically, and all the information appears on one screen. That's saved us time – and money.

Promapp will replace the company's range of processes created and stored in Visio, Word and on their intranet which, although documented, were difficult to update and manage for the diverse business groups throughout the Toll business.

We had been using Visio to record standard operating procedures, which staff found clunky and time-consuming. Half the time people didn't even know if a process existed because they didn't know where to look for it.

In the past Lantec's project managers have used tools such as Visio and Excel to record processes, but these were not easy to access or use by all staff. However with Promapp, no extensive technical knowledge is required and both process owners and users have been hands-down impressed.
